

Emergency Preparedness for Health Care – At Work and At Home (EM 106)

THE NEED

Emergency preparedness is the responsibility of every health care employee. Whether meeting The Joint Commission, Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services requirements or ensuring that employees will come to work during a disaster, emergency preparedness training is essential. The Yale New Haven Center for Emergency Preparedness and Disaster Response has developed Emergency Preparedness for Health Care – At Work and At Home (EM 106) to provide the information and action steps all employees can take to ensure a work environment prepared for disasters.

TARGET AUDIENCE

- ▼ Recommended for all hospital and health care employees
- ▼ Awareness-level

MODALITY

- ▼ Online

EM 106 TOPICS INCLUDE:

- ▼ Recognize the types of emergencies and disasters that can impact health care facilities
- ▼ Understand the phases of emergency management
- ▼ Understand the purpose of the Incident Command System
- ▼ Prepare health care and public health employees for their roles and responsibilities during a disaster
- ▼ Discuss steps for personal and family preparedness
